Abstract

Consumer dispute settlement becomes an important instrument for protecting consumers. This study aims to analyze (i) the urgency of consumer dispute settlement body and small claim mechanism; (ii) the comparison of consumer dispute settlement law in Indonesia and Malaysia; (iii) a lesson from Malaysia concerning small claim court. This research was conducted as a library research. The results show that urgency of consumer dispute settlement body and small claim mechanism are to guarantee ultimate consumer interest. Comparing of consumer dispute settlement law in Indonesia and Malaysia, each institution and mechanism having advantages and disadvantages to consider for betterment in the future. Consumer Dispute Agency is a middle way or a combination off SCC system and specific dispute resolution body. But, Indonesia needs to reiterate the existing Consumer Protection Act regarding the duty and authority of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency. There is authority overlap with other agencies needed to be addressed.

INTRODUCTION

A consumer legal regime without Legal Avenue to pursue any claim equals a building without the roof. Author start to discuss that consumer dispute settlement is a significant aspect within the consumer protection legal regime. Consumer dispute settlement is tantamount to protect the interest of customers.

Indonesia and Malaysia as a neighboring countries has the same problem to face, one of them is consumer protection. The main problem raised in this research is how to compare consumer dispute settlement in Indonesian and Malaysian Law. Indonesia and Malaysia released the consumer protection act in the same year 1999. Indonesia establish Law of The Republic of Indonesia Number 8 Year 1999 concerning Consumer Protection (Consumer Protection Act Indonesia) on 20 April 2000 and enforceable after 1 (one) year after while Malaysia promulgated Laws of Malaysia Act 599 Consumer Protection Act 1999 on 9th September 1999 and coming into operation 15th November 1999.

This research question will be answered by conducting a literature study. The study aims firstly to describe the urgency of consumer dispute settlement body and small claim mechanism. Secondly, to examine the comparison of consumer dispute settlement law in Indonesia and Malaysia. Thirdly, to analyze the improvement of small claim mechanism and dispute settlement body of consumer in Indonesia.

The term comparative law, in a foreign language, is translated vergelijkende rechtshleure (Dutch), droit comparé (French). This term, in higher education law in the United States, is often translated as conflict law or converted law of disputes, which means to be different for legal education in Indonesia (Atmasasmita, 2000).

Comparative law shows the distinction between comparative law as a method and as a science. Such ambiguity is usually found in broad formulations, such as can be found on Black's Law Dictionary stated comparative jurisprudence is the study of the principles of legal science by the comparison of various system of law (Black, 1968). Zweigert & Kötz define comparative law is the comparable legal institutions of the solution of comparable legal problems in different system (Zweigert and Kötz, 1998). This research is addressing the comparative law on consumer protection. Peter Cartwright define consumer protection law is an area of public law that regulates private law relationships between individual consumers and the businesses engaged in providing goods and services. Laws protecting consumers have adopted a variety of legal forms to achieve their objectives, including criminal law, tort and contract (Cartwright, 2001).

AZ Nasution argues that consumer protection law is part of consumer law which contains principles or rules of conduct and also contains the nature of protecting the interests of consumers. Consumer law is defined as a whole of legal principles and rules governing relationships and problems between various parties with one another in relation to goods and/or services within the social life. The legal principles and rules governing consumer relationships and problems are spread in various fields of law, both written and unwritten in the field of civil law, commercial law, criminal law, administrative law (state) and international law, in particular conventions relating to consumer interests (Shidarta, 2004).

Samsul defines consumer protection law as the whole principles and rules governing and protecting consumers in the relationships and problems of supply and use of consumer products between providers and consumers constitute the entire legislation, both law and other legislation and decisions - a judge's decision whose substance governs the interests of consumers (Samsul, 2004).

United Nations Guidelines for Consumer Protection (as expanded in 1999) adjust that to measures enabling consumers to obtain redress, the Governments should establish or maintain legal and/or administrative measures to enable consumers or, as appropriate, relevant organizations to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are expeditious, fair, inexpensive and accessible. Such procedures should take particular account of the needs of low-income consumers Governments should encourage all enterprises to resolve consumer disputes in a fair, expeditious and informal manner, and to establish voluntary mechanisms, including advisory services and informal complaints procedures, which can provide assistance to consumers (Department of Economic and Social Affairs, 2003).

In general the advantage of this research is to draw a picture of consumer protection law for both countries. The specific improvement are:

- a. Providing the description about urgency of consumer dispute settlement body and small claim mechanism.
- b. Presenting the comparison of consumer dispute settlement body in Indonesian and Malaysian Law.
- c. Giving analysis a lesson from Malaysia concerning small claim court for consumer dispute.

METHODS

This type of research in terms of legal research objectives is normative legal research, while in terms of the nature of the report is analytical descriptive research. Descriptive nature means through the results of the study is expected to provide a comparison picture of consumer protection law in Indonesia and Malaysia. By using a comparative law approach, author making comparison of two or more legal systems to find difference or similarity.

According to Abdul Kadir Muhammad, normative law research uses normative legal case studies in the form of legal products, such as reviewing the draft law. The subject of the study is the law that is conceptualized as the norm or rule that applies in society and becomes the reference of everyone's behavior. Normative legal research focuses on the inventory of positive law, legal principles and doctrines, legal discovery in concreto cases, systematic law, legal synchronization level, comparative law and legal history (Muhammad, 2004).

The library research were conducted in Yogyakarta. All the data are obtained from legal materials consist of (Soekanto, 1994):

1. Primary legal materials;
  - a. Law of The Republic of Indonesia Number 8 Year 1999 concerning Consumer Protection
  - b. Laws of Malaysia Act 599 Consumer Protection Act 1999
2. Secondary law materials, are legal materials that explain the primary legal materials, in example: Books, Journals, Research Reports, Magazines, Articles, and Documents.
3. Tertiary legal materials, are legal materials that complement primary and secondary legal materials, in example: Legal Dictionary, Indonesian Dictionary, Malay Dictionary, English Dictionary and Encyclopedia.

Data collection method was conducted by literature research which is listing and researching legal materials and written data, in the form of laws and regulations related to Consumer Protection, books, scientific journals, articles, newspapers and documents - other written documents relating to the object of research. All data analyzed by descriptive-qualitative. Drawing conclusion by giving picture or describing and lead to conclusion.

RESULT AND DISCUSSION

Urgency of Consumer Dispute Settlement body and Small Claim Mechanism

Relationship between consumer and businessman, consumer demand for justice by making claim. The claims seek to reflect consumer dissatisfaction due to unfair practices by the trader. Beside the substantive law protect consumer interest, the effective, respected and honored dispute resolution mechanism should also be available.

The need for the modern small claims court was recognized in 1913 by Dean Roscoe Pound:

For ordinary causes our contentious system has great merit as a means of getting at the truth. But it is a denial of justice in small causes to drive litigants to employ lawyers, and it is a shame to drive them to legal aid societies to get as a charity what the state should give as a right (Pound, 1912).

The legal system exists, then, as an avenue through which every person in society who has a valid claim against another should be able to move to attain satisfaction of that claim. Conversely, it should be a protection to persons against invalid claims from other members of society. The fact that a claim is small or held by a person without the knowledge or capabilities to enforce it should be of no importance whatsoever. If the claim is a valid one it should be capable of enforcement. When a claim cannot be enforced because the relative cost is prohibitive, there is, as Pound has said, a "denial of justice" (Axworthy, 1976).

Small Claims Courts (SCC) have been set up primarily in order to make civil justice accessible to the poor people. SCC provide an inexpensive and efficient means of dispute settlement for a potentially large number of claimants, but whether they actually perform this function for the poor is debatable, as already pointed out. They have failed to provide "a kind of participatory justice where every citizen would have his say, no matter how small his claim" (Moulton, 1969).

Consumer dispute is a dispute that one of the parties must consumer. Indonesian Consumer Protection Act regulates in Article 45 Chapter X. Consumer disputes are, fundamentally, about contracts. Disagreements about the existence, meaning and effect of contracts create problems between the parties to those contracts. The parties can deal with these problems in some of ways, as, for instance, by self-help; by seeking dispute resolution; by seeking regulation; or by recourse to litigation in the general courts. In resorting to self-help, one party takes direct action to solve a perceived or real dispute to their own satisfaction, without the co-operation or agreement of the other party. The level of intensity and social destruction arising from pursuit of self-help can vary from quietly avoiding or ignoring the relevant contract (an option which can be taken by consumers and industry parties alike) through to public protest, and perhaps even violent action (an option chosen with varying success by both weak and powerful consumers). Self-help is often said to be based on the exercise of rights, but in reality it is not concerned with rights but with the exercise of power. In any event, in the absence of the complete destruction or disabling of one of the parties, such self-help solutions are usually not a resolution or determination of the real or underlying problem, as there is neither agreement between the parties nor enforcement of the outcome by the state. The dispute is not resolved in a lasting or authoritative manner (O'Shea & Rickett, 2006).

A research conducted in early 2016 by the Center for Domestic Trade Policy, Agency for the Assessment and Development of Trade, in collaboration with the Bogor Agricultural Institute (IPB) and the Ministry of National Development Planning, the needs of consumer protection one of which is advocacy (channel complaints, granting compensation/compensation for losses due to the use of goods/services). Provision of protection to consumers is not only finished at the time of purchase or when consuming goods or services, but also must be given if the consumption of goods or services cause harm or harm to consumers in the future. Consumer need guarantees of advocacy from the government if they loses due to consuming goods or services. The result showed that 37% of consumers had experienced problems in consuming goods or services. The problem arise from both the merchant and the retailer. However, from the number of consumers experiencing problems, there are only about 54% of consumers who make complaints. Most (44%) consumers directly complained to the seller of the product, while the rest to the producers (15%) and family or relatives (9%). Only a small percentage (1%) made a complaint to the Consumer Complaint Institute. A total of 44% of consumers stated the reason for not making complaints, among others, is not knowing the location of the complainant, complicated complaint procedures, and the long process services (Ministry of Domestic Trade of Co-operatives and Consumerism of Malaysia, 2017).

There are some factors contribute to make the consumer unwilling to access justice for theirs dispute. Judiciary system has not been simple, fast and low cost, and avoiding attitudes conflict despite its rights as the consumer is violated. Experience consumers who get legal aid from the Indonesian Consumers Foundation feel the access for justice through the courts are time consuming, high cost, as well as sacrifice from family. Frequently the sacrifice given is not comparable with restoration of rights which are violated (Shofie, 2016).

In Malaysia, before the establishment of the tribunal, all disputes between a consumer and a supplier or manufacturer had to be brought before a civil court which involves complicated procedures, high costs and is time consuming. These are some of the reasons why consumers are reluctant to pursue their claims against irresponsible and unscrupulous suppliers or manufacturers especially when the amount claimed is small (Ministry of Domestic Trade of Co-operatives and Consumerism of Malaysia., 2017).

Fostering the development of effective, low cost ways for consumers to resolve their disputes and obtain monetary compensation for losses sustained is a key consumer policy objective. The particular features of consumer disputes require tailored mechanisms that can provide consumers with access to remedies that do not impose a cost, delay and burden disproportionate to the economic value at stake. Where outside the court method is not successful, or in cases that are not conducive to informal resolution ( e.g. cases involving fraudulent or illegitimate businesses), small claims court procedures can offer consumers access to the court system at a cost and burden not disproportionate to the amount of their claim. Other mechanism to settle consumer dispute is small claim procedure. Specific institution providing consumer dispute settlement is need. The institution should be only focusing the role on consumer dispute settlement. So, it must be stated that the subject are consumer and businessman while the object is dispute between them concerning consumer transaction. Hearing process will be held by the authorities whom expertize in consumer protection.

According to Thomas, consumer claims are mostly (but not all) are small claims. Normally, injuries, damages or losses suffered by consumers are relatively small. He assumed that the conventional dispute resolution is not appropriate. Economically, small claim require redress mechanism that does not involve legal procedure. A reliable redress is important to ensure consumer protection (Thomas, 1988).

If the class of persons which would use the facilities of a SCC is so circumscribed as to be negligible, or if the existing court structure is adequate for all reasonable demands made upon it, the proposal to create a new tribunal may be opposed on the grounds of overlapping, expense, and over-organization. With respect to the question whether the regular court system is an adequate device, it may be urged that the inevitable expense, delay, and complexity tend to discourage the man who has a small claim. It is possible to prove that with our present system of court costs and fees, the litigant with the small claim pays a disproportionate part of the expense of operating the judicial machine." Records indicate that many trial-court calendars are months or even years behind, and that small cases help to clog the wheels. The complexity of the system makes necessary an additional expense, as litigants must be represented by counsel. Since many routine small claims do not involve profound questions of law, it seems wasteful of time and money to require that they be put through an elaborate litigation process. There are at least two alternatives-to provide a lawyer for the litigant without cost to himself, as in the case of legal-aid societies, or to create a new kind of court. Legal-aid societies, which would naturally appear as counsel in many small claims, are on record as favoring the establishment of small-claims courts. (Bradway, 1940). However, the procedure carried out in a simple, cheap and fast will result in unfair judgment to the plaintiff and defendant (Baldwin, 2003).

Comparison of Consumer Dispute Settlement Institution in Indonesia and Malaysia

Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency is one of the consumer justice institutions located in each regency and municipalities throughout Indonesia as stipulated under Law No. 8 of 1999 on Consumer Protection. This institution has the primary duty to resolve consumer disputes outside the public court. The body consists of representatives of government apparatus, consumers and business actors or producers whom are appointed or dismissed by the Minister, in handling and managing consumer issues. Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency has the authority to examine the correctness of reports and statements of the parties to the dispute, to see or request a receipt, bills or receipts, lab test results or other evidence, the decision is binding and final settlement for the parties.

Position of the parties on the adjudication procedure is different from the court or even small claim court. The consumer always being claimant while the business being defendant.

Early establishment of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency, authority to protect consumer is on Local Government in Regency or Municipalities. Its consequence is, the budget must be allocated from Regional Government Budget. After Judicial Review Decision of Constitutional Court, the authority of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency and its budget transferred to Province Government. Based on Law of The Republic of Indonesia Number 23 Year 2014 Concerning Regional Government, regulate implementation of authority of consumer protection. Its regulation does not mean to annulment the authorities to existence of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency in Regency or Municipalities, but only the budget allocated from Province.

Resolution Adopted by The General Assembly (on the report of the Second Committee A/39/789/Add.2)) 39/248 on Consumer Protection 16 April 1985 well known as UN Guidelines on Consumer Protection is the inspiration of establishment and development of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency (Shofie, 2016). The guideline as follows :

1. Governments should provide or maintain adequate infrastructure to develop, implement and monitor consumer protection policies. Special care should be taken to ensure for consumer protection are implemented for the benefit of all sectors of the population, particularly the rural population.
2. Governments should establish or maintain legal and/or administrative measures to enable consumers or, as appropriate, relevant organization to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are expeditious, fair, inexpensive and accessible. Such procedures should take particular account of the needs of low-income consumers.

3. Governments should encourage all enterprises to resolve consumer disputes in a fair, expeditious and informal manner, and to establish voluntary mechanisms, including advisory services and informal complaints procedures, which can provide assistance to consumers.
4. Governments should encourage consumer organizations and other interested groups, including media, to undertake education and information programs, particularly for the benefit of low-income consumer groups in rural and urban areas

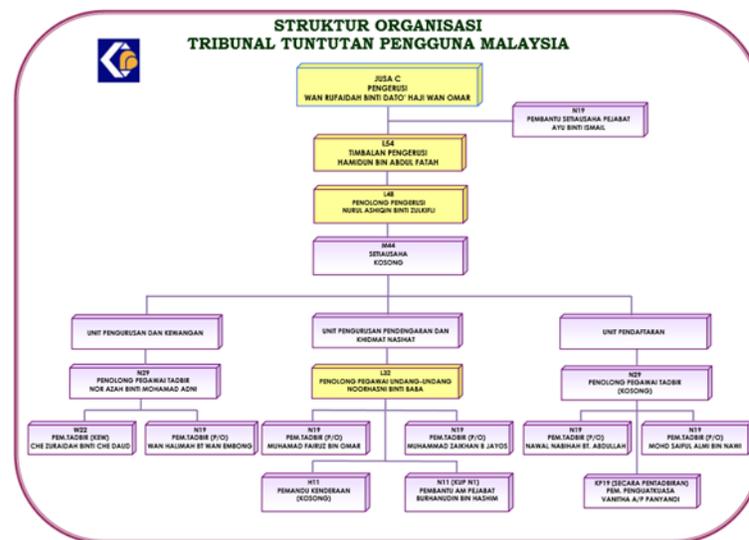

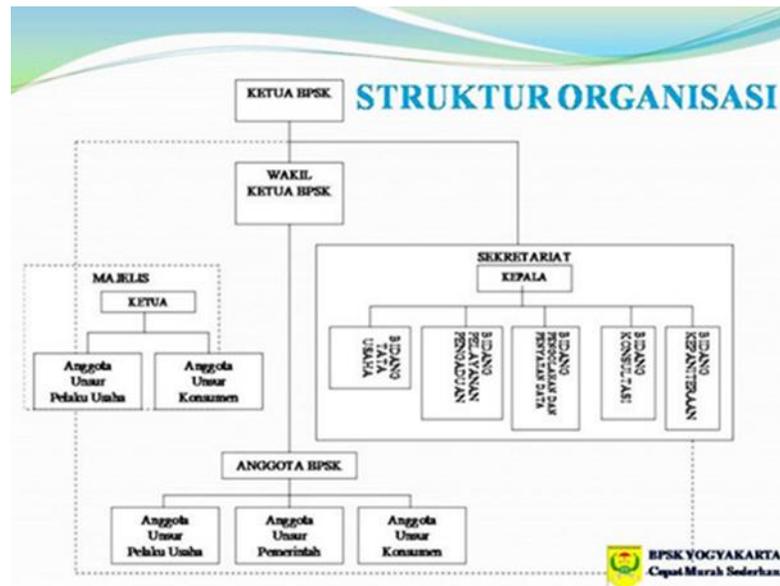

Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency is designed not as a court, there is no judge, nor conducting authority to execute the verdict. Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency having similarity but not Small Claims Court. It is more likely quasi-rechtspraak as inspired from its predecessor, Settlement Committee Regional Labor Disputes and the Labor Dispute Settlement Committee has been liquidated and its successor, the Industrial Relations Court, has been running its duty is based on Law Number 2 Year 2004 regarding Dispute Settlement Industrial Relations and its implementing regulations. This agency is designed as an alternative to consumer dispute resolution outside the court with the main task organization is basically a product of conciliation, mediation and arbitration decision. Unfortunately, the Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency arbitration verdict may still be filed to the District Court in the legal ward of where the consumer domiciled.

Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency seems to be designed by combining both legal systems, where the Small Claim Tribunal model is adapted to the court model and the typical ADR (Alternative Dispute Resolution) model of Indonesia. This is implied from the concept of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency based on Consumer Protection Act 1999 Indonesia is one of the alternative dispute settlement institution outside the court, but in the adjudication process is ruled by procedural law in District Court (Wisnubroto, n.d.). The duties and authorities of the Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency) is regulated in Article 52 UUPK jo. SK. Minister of Industry and Trade Number 350/MPP/Kep/1212001 dated December 10 2001 on the Implementation of Duties and Authority of Consular Dispute Resolution Body, namely:

- a. Carrying out consumer handling and dispute resolution with conciliation, mediation, and arbitration
- b. Providing consumer protection consultations;
- c. Monitoring the inclusion of the standard clause;
- d. Reporting to the public prosecutor in case of violation of the Consumer Protection Act;
- e. Receiving a written or no written complaint from the consumer about violation of consumer protection;
- f. Conducting research and inspection of consumer protection disputes;
- g. Calling a suspected business offender to consumer protection;
- h. Calling and present witnesses, expert witnesses and/or any person who is allegedly knowing the violation of the Consumer Protection Act;
- i. Requesting assistance to the investigator to present witnesses, expert witnesses, or any person on item g and item h which is not willing to fulfill call the Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency;
- j. Obtaining, examine and/or assess letters, documents, or other evidence for investigation and/or examination;
- k. Deciding and determine whether or not there is a loss on the part of the consumer;
- l. Informing the verdict to the undertaking violation of consumer protection;
- m. Imposing administrative sanctions on the offending business actor provisions of the Consumer Protection Act.

Based on duty and authority then there are 2 (two) strategic functions this institution (Nugroho, 2008):

1. Serving as an instrument law of dispute resolution outside court (alternative dispute resolution) through conciliation, mediation and arbitration.
2. Monitoring inclusion of a standard clause (one sided standard form contract) by the perpetrator business (Article 52 point "c" Consumer Protection Act). Included here is the standard clause

The Tribunal for Consumer Claims Malaysia (TCCM) is an independent judicial body established under Section 85 the Consumer Protection Act 1999 and came into force on 15 November 1999 (Laws of Malaysia Act 212). It was set up as a simple, cheap and fast alternative channel for consumers to claim losses not exceeding RM25, 000 connected with goods purchased or services obtained from traders or service providers (Ministry of Domestic Trade of Co-operatives and Consumerism of Malaysia., 2017).

Before the establishment of the Tribunal, all disputes between consumers and the traders, suppliers or manufacturers of goods or the service providers is been brought to the civil courts which involved complicated procedures, high costs and time consuming. These are some of the reasons as to why the consumers were reluctant to pursue their claims against the irresponsible and unethical traders, suppliers, or manufacturers of goods or service providers, in civil courts, especially when the amount claimed is small, even though currently there exist Small Claims

Courts in every state to hear claims not exceeding RM 5,000.00 (Ministry of Domestic Trade of Co-operatives and Consumerism of Malaysia., 2017).

The Tribunal has no jurisdiction to hear any claim arising from personal injury or death; recovery of land or any estate or interest in land; dispute in respect of title of any land or estate or interest in land dispute concerning the entitlement of any person under a will or on any intestacy; dispute on matters regarding franchise, goodwill, trade secrets or other intellectual property and any cause in action. It also have no authority to examine any other tribunal had been established under any other written law to hear and determine claims on matters which is the subject matter of such claim. (Ministry of Domestic Trade of Co-operatives and Consumerism of Malaysia, 2017).

Small Claim Mechanism for Consumer in Indonesia: A Lesson from Malaysia

Indonesia has a small procedure regulation named The Rules of Supreme Court No. 2 of 2015 concerning Procedures of Simple Claim Settlement. The terminology is simple claim not small claim. On the author opinion, the substance of the regulation is about small claim. A simple lawsuit is a civil suit with the value of material lawsuit at most Rp 200.000.000,00 (two hundred million rupiah) which is solved by a simple procedures and verification. Settlement with a simple lawsuit can only be used for breach of contract and/or Unlawful Acts.

However, not all cases of breach of contract and or unlawful act can be completed through completion simple lawsuit. Case that cannot resolved through this mechanism, among others:

1. The case of which the settlement of the dispute conducted by a special court as set out in the legislation, such as competition, consumer dispute and industrial relations disputes
2. Cases related to rights disputes over the ground.

Therefore the Small Claim Court has not been established for consumer dispute settlement in Indonesia. Based on Consumer Act 1999 Indonesia, consumer dispute settlement excluding from that mechanism and having a special institution.

Article 45 Paragraph (4) divides the consumer settlement into 2 parts:

1. Dispute resolution outside the court
2. The settlement of disputes peacefully, by the parties themselves, customers and business actors/producers;
3. Dispute resolution through the Conflict Resolution Body using alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, namely conciliation, mediation and arbitration.
4. Dispute resolution to the court

The outside court consumer dispute settlement is held to reach agreement on the form and amount of compensation, or on specific actions to ensure that there will be no recurrence of any losses suffered by the consumer. Customer dispute settlement patterns beyond the requirements of the Act, are the right choice, since the formulated solution contains a satisfactory solution to the disrupted party.

By having no small specific small claim court for the consumer, it will strengthen the function of existing dispute settlement institution/mechanism especially Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency. Based on Presidential Decree No. 90/2001 on Establishment of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency, in an effort to facilitate the consumers to reach the institution, there is no Jurisdictional area limitation, so that the consumer can complain to the Dispute Settlement Agency wherever his urge..

How about Malaysia? Malaysia has set up in 2 January 1987 to help the consumer for fast, simple and informal, Small Claim Court (SCC). In 1988, SCC has jurisdiction to hear small claims where the claim does not exceed RM 5.000 (Order 93, rule 2 ROC). No lawyer is allowed to represent either the claimant or defendant, unless it is a registered company (Order 93, rule 7). Only the claimant and the defendant are allowed to put their cases forward before a magistrate. The magistrate's judgment is final and neither party can appeal to a higher court, unless it is on a point of law.

As a benchmarking, we should also consider the shortcoming of SCC in Malaysia. According to Zakuan et al, the weakness of it as follows (Abdullah, 2015):

1. Privately proceedings in magistrate chambers
This point contrary to the fundamental principles that judicial proceedings should be conducted openly for public interest and checks and balances system.
2. No representation
SCC does not allow the party to be represented by a counsel. The absence of legal counsel causing stress among the parties involved when undergoing a kind of a complicated trial process.
3. No cost regime
The cost not to be allowed by the losing party. Application of this regime prevents the consumer from using legal services.
4. Magistrate playing active resolving dispute
This action will only result in the failure to uphold justice. If shorter period taken to settle the claim, this will weaken the SCC system as the magistrate will make the judgment feverishly.
5. Without appeal process
When the error in law occur, it will prevent the plaintiff from gaining justice.

CONCLUSION

Urgency of consumer dispute settlement body and small claim mechanism are to guarantee ultimate consumer interest. Comparing of consumer dispute settlement law in Indonesia and Malaysia, each institution dan mechanism having advantages and disadvantages to consider for lbetterment in the future. Consumer Dispute Agency is a middle way or a combination off SCC system and specific dispute resolution body. But, Indonesia needs to reiterate the existing Consumer Protection Act regarding the duty and authority of Consumer Dispute Settlement Agency. There is authority overlap with other agencies needed to be addressed.
